When to Walk Away

Our relationships we have often vary from person to person. By relationships I just don't mean 'love' relationships but also friendships, family ties and our interactions with anyone we come across. At the beginning, people all seem to be pretty cool ... well that makes sense as we all do tend to put our best foot forwards.

However, as Christians, the Holy Spirit often warns us through giving us time to think. As we continue to interact with people, the more closely we interact the more we 'discover' about them. We begin to understand what makes them tick, what makes them happy; we learn to decipher whether their words are merely sweet talk and when their walk actually matches their talk.

Any healthy relationship needs to be WORKED ON. Good things NEVER come easy. It takes a commitment of time and effort to get to know one another – it cannot be achieved with a hi and a goodbye as many people would like to do. We begin to see positives, negatives, faults, strengths, pros and cons and what not. The more quality time we spend with one another, we get closer to another we begin to share our lives so that we can understand one another...

As these things take place each one of us has to make a 'commitment' to work on these friendships and relationships. Evaluations have to take place! Do these people matter to us or not? What are the areas of strengths? Can I live with them? Likewise with their weaknesses! Do they irritate me so much that I can't stand them?

As long as it depends on you, live at peace with one another. If you can't live at peace with another and (to make peace it doesn't only depend on you), then you can walk away! Just remember though that any relationship whether it is with friends, colleagues, partners or even God doesn't come easy.

A good quality relationship takes work and much sacrifice, with give and take and a certain extent of compromise. The choice is yours – allow the Holy Spirit to help you with every relationship!

Deacon Mike
