

Christ is the Answer

There is a story told of two men riding on a train a few years after the Civil War, Gen Wallace and Col Ingersoll. Wallace a man of faith, and Ingersoll an agnostic. As their conversation turned to their spiritual differences, Wallace realized that he wasn't able to answer the questions and doubts raised by Ingersoll. Embarrassed by his lack of understanding his own faith, Wallace began studying the scriptures for answers. The result was his writing of a classic historical novel; Ben-Hur: A Tale of the Christ; released in 1880.

Probing questions from skeptics don't have to be a threat to our faith. Instead, they can motivate us to seek a deeper understanding and equip us to respond wisely and patiently to those who might question our faith.

We don't have to have an answer for every question, but we need the courage, confidence and conviction to share, why we love Christ and the hope that is in us. We just need to be a witness to our faith, because Christ is the ultimate answer to life's greatest questions.

Together through prayer and service,
